Rebecca Rebbe is an assistant professor of social work at the University of Southern California. Rebecca's research examines community responses to child maltreatment through systems, laws, and policies. Rebecca has been trained in demographic methods and specializes in using population-based linked administrative datasets. Her research is informed by 7 years of post-MSW practice working with families involved with the child welfare system, in both the public and private sectors. Rebecca earned her PhD in social welfare from the University of Washington, received a MSW from Boston College, and has a master's degree in education from Harvard University.
