Macy Adams is the Manager of Prevention Programming at the Dee Norton Child Advocacy Center. In this capacity she promotes child maltreatment education and prevention efforts in schools and throughout the community. She graduated from the University of South Carolina with a Bachelor of Arts in Psychology and the College of Charleston with a Master's in Public Administration. Her research focuses on public service equity for underserved and underrepresented populations in the American South. She previously worked as an Organizational Consultant helping nonprofits and government offices translate their goals into reality.